

HOW TO REMOVE THE FLOOR DECAL

When it's time to remove a floor decal, it is important that the proper steps are used to remove it safely without damaging the flooring surface underneath.

To begin, you should try to peel the majority of the decal from the floor. Ideally, you'll be able to peel it off without hitting any resistance. At first, you can peel the decal with your fingers.

If you can't get a grip on the decal with your hand, you can use a thin scraper, plastic credit card or other similar item to get it to come off the floor. At the decal's edge, wedge the scraper between the decal and the floor, making a gap that you can pull the decal from. Moving the scraper back and forth with a little bit of pressure will often be an effective method to make the gap large enough to peel the decal off.

If you can't get it off with a scraper, DO NOT try to use a sharper material like a knife, as it can harm the flooring surface. Instead, if the decal isn't peeling well and continuously tears, you can use a blow dryer to put some heat on the decal. The heat will soften and loosen up the adhesive and allow you to pull the decal up easier.

HOW TO CLEAN THE FLOORS AFTERWARDS TO REMOVE ANY RESIDUE

After you've removed the decal, clean up the floor to get rid of any residue left from the adhesive. For most surfaces, you can use a damp cloth dipped in soapy water to gently scrub the residue away. If the residue doesn't come off easily, you can use more pressure, or you can dip the cloth in rubbing alcohol and resume scrubbing.

Finally, after you've gotten the residue to stop sticking to the floor, you can clean the surface with a damp cloth to get any soap or extra dirt off of the ground. After everything has been wiped up, you'll need to dry the surface to prevent any slips or falls.